PARKED CAR DRIVER VICTIM OF BANDIT

The old style of courting on the parlor sofa may be out of date, but it has its advantages, according to G. A. Copeland of Oakland who is now out $17 for picking dark roads in which to park his car. Copeland, with a young lady companion, had driven to the little frequented section of the old highway between this city and San Carlos Saturday evening and had stopped by the side of the road to enjoy the starlight and moonlight.

In the middle of a most enjoyable evening, however, the young man's thoughts which are said to turn in the spring to considerations which have little to do with bandits ,unless they be love bandits, were rudly recalled to a consideration of finances. The cause of the sudden change of thought was an armed man who demanded that Copeland relieve himself of all valued possessions, including $17 in cash. He also took some jewelry from the young lady and examined it, but with the gallantry of Rob Roy returned it saying that he robbed men only. Copeland will from now on pick more congested thoroughfares, which if less secluded, are much safer.

IMPORTANT NEW DEVELOPMENTS NEAR DUMBARTON BRIDGE

The Dumbarton Bridge Company announced this week that a large paving contract has been let for the construction of pavement from Willow Road to bridge. Heavy equipment was moved to Willow Road on Monday and work has already started on the new pavement between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Dumbarton bridge. The county will also start paving Willow road between Bay road and the Southern Pacific railroad within a few days.

Santa Barbara and San Francisco capitalists purchased the old Henderson tract of 390 acres some months ago and announce that a new civic centre will be built on this tract which is a key property fronting on Willow road and the Southern Pacific railroad. Already extensive improvements are under way towards the founding of a new Peninsula City through which the heevy San Joaquin and East Bay traffic must pass after crossing the Dumbarton bridge enroute to Palo Alto, Menlo Park, Redwood City, San Mateo and San Francisco, and southerly to San Jose.

Parties desiring to view the new bridge can do so by motoring along the Middlefield road to Ringwood, down Ringwood to Bay road west on Bay road to Willow road and south on Willow road to the Southern Pacific railroad, where a splendid view of the bridge can be obtained.

"RED WAGON BOYS" SCORE AT BASEBALL

The local fire fighters have long held undisputed laurels for prowess in battling flames, and are understood to be "not so bad" when it comes to water fights, but they hung another scalp on their belts last Sunday by demonstrating to the world in general and to Burlingame's fire department in particular that what they do at fire fighting "ain't nothing" to what they can do on a baseball diamond.

Much of the credit for the Redwood's long end of a 15 to 4 score in the game with the firemen of Burlingame is due to the excellent pitching of Al Russell. Russell, however, did not play the game alone, as excellent support was given by every member of the team.

The Redwood City organization was as follows:

Allain, (c), Russell, (p), Anderson, (1b), Beeger, (ss), Drathman, (2b), Winter, (3b), McAuliffe, (lf), Douglas, (cf) Brown, (rf), Holmquist, (rf), Werder, (rf).

Burlingame's line-up follows:

W. Dessin, (1b), Bryant, (3b), Little, (cf), Taylor, (lf), Shearer, (p-2b), Jensen, (c), Dornberger (ss), Janson, (2b-ss), B. Dessin, (rf), Petronave, (cf), Bristow, (ss-p).

With this large force it is believed that the road will be finished by the latter part of July, so that the public will be crossing the bridge by the first of August. RADIO

George W. Vinal, Government Authority on Batteries, in His Laboratory at the United States Bureau of Standards, at Washington.

When a radio receiver fails to give its customary volume the "B" batteries are almost invariably blamed. It is true that they are sometimes the cause of this trouble but it is advisable to measure their voltage before arriving at this conclusion. A good make of "B" battery of adequate size should last, even with a receiver consuming heavy "B" battery current, for at least six months and if it is a moderately economical receiver, from nine to twelve months, provided it is given the average use of about two hours per day. Failure to give such life is an indication, either that it is a battery of inferior make, or of inadequate capacity for the set used or that there is a defect in the receiver.

Causes of Short Battery Life.

Briefly, the factors most frequently causing short "B" battery life are:

1. Audio-frequency amplifier not equipped with "C" battery.
2. "C" battery exhausted.
3. Excessive plate voltage.
4. Tubes draw excessive current because of accidental displacement of grid and plate.
5. "B" battery of insufficient capacity for the drain placed upon it.

This last cause is frequently overlooked because the first cost of large batteries is somewhat more than that of small ones. But it is indeed a wasteful practice to use a battery of inadequate capacity; this is apparent if the cost is figured in cent per hour of use, rather than in first cost. On the face of it, certainly it seems more expensive to pay about 25 per cent more for a heavy duty "B" battery, but the economy is apparent when the heavy duty lasts twice as long in service as the "large" size battery. The savings are even greater when heavy duty "B" batteries are substituted for the small portable size batteries which are sometimes erroneously used for home receivers. There have been cases when "B" battery maintenance cost has been reduced from 12 cents an hour to 2 cents an hour by using a heavy duty or extra large "B" battery in preference to one of the portable sizes.

It frequently happens that receiving set owners replace their "B" batteries when volume falls. The slightly increased volume which new "B" batteries give may lead to the conclusion that an exhausted "B" battery was the cause of the reduced volume. A "B" battery voltmeter, however, might show only a normal fall in voltage which would not account for the reduction in volume.

In such cases it is advisable to inspect the antenna connections for a broken or corroded lead-in, loose ground connection, worn out "C" battery or lost magnetization of loud speaker unit. Still another cause of reduced volume is the loss of active material on the tube filaments. Quoting from the Technical News Bulletin, issued by the national bureau of standards:

Tubes Lose Sensitivity.

"Electron tubes in radio receiving sets eventually lose their sensitivity. This sometimes progresses to the point where the receiving set operates very poorly or not at all, even though the tube filament is not burned out. The user of the set frequently confuses this condition with that due to an exhausted "B" battery. If the tubes are of the thoriated tungsten (X-L) filament type, they can usually be rejuvenated to serve as well as new tubes in the receiving set."

A simple process of rejuvenation, which can be performed at home, consists in disconnecting the "B" battery from the set and burning the filaments at full brilliance for a half hour. Usually this restores the filaments to full activity.

The two major causes of reduced volume are exhausted "B" batteries and worn-out tube filaments. It is easy to determine which is responsible for the loss of volume. A good, reliable voltmeter will indicate the condition of the "B" batteries. If each 45-volt "B" battery registers 34 volts or more, the cause of reduced volume lies elsewhere, probably with the tubes. Lacking a reliable voltmeter to test "B" batteries, a good plan is to have on hand one or two spare tubes which are known to be in good condition. Substitute the new tubes for those in the set and if this makes a marked improvement in volume, it is an indication that the old tubes require reactivation or renewal.

By-Pass Condensers an Aid to Radio Receiver

There are a number of places in a receiver where by-pass condensers should be used to help improve its operation. By-pass or blocking condensers keep the radio frequency currents in the part of the circuit where they belong. If the radio frequency or high frequency current strays into the audio frequency or low frequency part of the circuit, you will get howls and noises and generally poor performance from your set. In fact, if very much radio frequency gets through to the audio you may not be able to operate the receiver at all.

By-pass condensers should be used across any part that has a high resistance or impedence to provide an easy path for the radio frequency current. A by-pass condenser should always be provided across the "A" and "B" batteries. When the batteries are new the resistance is not extremely high, but after they have been in use for some time this resistance rises rapidly and some means must be provided to counteract this effect. A fairly large capacity must be used from one-half to two mfd. The larger the better. Connect the condenser between the 45-volt plus and the negative filament and between the 90-volt plus and the negative filament. Even with a new battery these condensers will improve reception, but their effect will be particularly noticeable with batteries that have been used a short time.

Use good quality condensers and make sure they are not leaking. To test for leakage connect a 90-volt battery across the condenser for a few seconds, then, after setting aside for about 15 minutes, touch the condenser contacts with a pair of phone tips. If there is no click heard in phones then the condenser is leaking. If, however, you hear a click, it is O. K.

The next place a blocking condenser should be tried is across the primaries of the audio transformers. Very often a small amount of radio frequency current will get through from the detector and will pass through the primary of the transformer unless an easier path is provided for it. A condenser of from .0025 to .01 should be used. The best value will be found by trying various capacities.

Improved Variable Condenser

New variable condensers are arranged in a brass housing that protects the plates from injury, keeps dust and dirt out and at the same time shields the condenser from body capacity and from magnetic spraying of other nearby instruments.

To Avoid Loud Speaker and Head Phone Trouble

Loud speaker and head phone trouble can be avoided to a great extent if the proper precautions are taken to insure their being handled properly. The most common cause of poor production and loss of volume lies in the fact that the terminals are reversed and the magnets are operating at opposite polarity, which in time will cause the unit to become completely demagnetized.

In most loud speakers and head phones the positive terminal is indicated by a red runner in the cord. In case there is no marker the following method may be used: Unscrew caps or whatever is necessary to expose the permanent magnet. Load the magnets with a few phonograph needles or some other light steel articles.

Then connect the speaker terminals to two or three dry cells of a storage battery first in one direction and then the other. It will be noted that the "pull" of the magnets is quite strong when the leads are connected in one particular way, the proper connection being indicated by the stronger "pull." The leads may then be marked to correspond with the battery connections.

If your speaker distorts or seems raspy, particularly when handling loud signals, it is sometimes very beneficial to place a few sheets of tissue paper between the diaphragm and the magnets. The thickness of the paper can best be obtained by trial. This will in no way affect the sensitivity of the unit.

Cause of "Dead Spots"

"Dead spots" in metropolitan areas cannot be eliminated without removing the large steel structures. Large steel-frame buildings and other metallic structures are the cause of this phenomenon.

Regeneration Helps

The effect of regeneration is to decrease the resistance of the circuit at the resonant point, while maintaining the high resistance at points off resonance. This accounts for the volume and selectivity obtained with some regenerative circuits.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Storm Raised in Congress by President's New Order for Dry Enforcement.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S executive order authorizing the appointment of state, county and municipal officers as prohibition agents at nominal salary has raised a great storm in congress, and on Tuesday the senate decided its judiciary committee should conduct an inquiry into the legality of the order, "to enable the senate to determine whether legislation is advisable or necessary" in connection with the enforcement policy it embodies. The resolution directing this inquiry was introduced by Senator King of Utah, a dry, who said the order was unauthorized by congress or any state legislature and "appeared to be of dubious legality." Senator Robinson of Arkansas, minority leader and an ardent dry, denounced the order as executive usurpation and a serious blow to state rights and to prohibition itself. And naturally the wets in the senate, led by Edge of New Jersey, did not overlook the opportunity.

In the lower house Mr. Coolidge's action caused almost as great a rumpus. Britten of Illinois and Hill of Maryland introduced resolutions to prevent the order from being put into effect, and Linthicum of Maryland made a warm speech in which he declared the order was centralization gone mad. He and others called attention to the contrast between the president's order and the warnings he uttered in his recent Williamsburg speech of the danger of federal encroachments on the sovereignty of the states. The Republicans had said that in that address he had forestalled the raising of the state rights issue by the Democrats in 1928, and now some of them feel that he has lost the ground he then gained. The Democrats assert that his actions do not square with his professions.

Mr. Coolidge was seemingly surprised by the storm of criticism that met his order. On his behalf it was explained that it was issued at the request of General Andrews, chief prohibition enforcer, and was designed especially to cope with a situation that had arisen in California. There was no intention of applying it generally or in any state where such dual holding of office is forbidden by law. Attorney General Sargent has held that the order is legal, but Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has said he would not have indorsed it if he had known it was to meet with such opposition. White House spokesmen said it never occurred to Mr. Coolidge that the order would be attacked as an invasion of state rights, for the reason that in the eighteenth amendment the states have invited, and in his opinion commanded, the federal government to share the concurrent enforcement of national prohibition. When the states invited the federal government into what had, theretofore, been their exclusive jurisdiction, the federal government could hardly be called a trespasser, according to the President's reasoning.

IN HIS speech attacking the executive order Senator Robinson gave the wets occasion for joy by this statement:

"There has been considerable discussion on both sides of this chamber as to whether prohibition enforcement has failed so completely as to justify such radical measures as amendment of the Constitution or modification of the Volstead act. A referendum on the question has been proposed. Passing over the constitutionality of the proposal, I am moved to say that the course of events is tending to compel those who favor prohibition to consent to a referendum. There are some states in which there is widespread wet sentiment which are taking steps for state referendums. In my opinion there are five or six states which might vote for modification on such a referendum, but the rest of the states would vote dry."

Senator Glass of Virginia, who is as dry as they make them, thought it not unlikely the Volstead act might be modified by congress. "Some of us drys," said he, "might concede that the act overshoots the eighteenth amendment."

ADMINISTRATION senators who are candidates for renomination and who are listed as drys got another jolt in the Oregon primaries, for the Republicans of that state rejected Senator Stanfield and gave the nomination to Frederick Steiwer of Pendleton, a lawyer and wheat grower. Stanfield formerly was considered a liberal on the liquor question but has become a militant dry. Steiwer, though indorsed by the Anti-Saloon league, also was backed by certain organizations that have a leaning toward wetness.

CONSTRUCTION of post offices and other government buildings to cost $165,000,000 during the next five years is provided for in the public buildings bill signed last week by the President. The measure specifically provides that $50,000,000 shall be spent for new buildings in the District of Columbia, $100,000,000 for new buildings throughout the country, and $15,000,000 for the completion of projects already authorized. The secretary of the treasury is to submit to congress when it convenes each year a list of estimates for the construction of needed buildings, distributing the money among the states fairly on a basis of area, population and postal receipts.

THE Haugen farm relief bill was defeated in the house by a vote of 167 to 212, and though Senator Cummins of Iowa did not support the administration in its opposition to the measure, the result is said to be reacting against him in the Iowa primary campaign. Letters from Mr. Haugen declaring that Mr. Cummins has been indefatigable in his aid of measures advocated by the corn-belt leaders are being broadcast, but still the farmers are represented as being grouchy. Chief of the senator's opponents for the nomination is Smith W. Brookhart, who was unseated in favor of Dan Steck, Democrat. His main argument in his campaign speeches is that he was robbed of his seat and that thereby the voters of Iowa were disfranchised. All in all, however, it was predicted last week that the veteran Cummins would win a renomination.

DELEGATES from the United States and 18 Latin-American countries and representatives from Europe and Asia assembled in Washington for the second Pan-American Red Cross conference. President Coolidge opened the proceedings with a graceful speech in which he gave the highest praise to the Red Cross societies of the world for their work in alleviating human suffering and in preparing the peoples of the world for international peace.

IN THE Geneva preliminary conference on disarmament considerable progress was made. The delegates decided, at the suggestion of M. Boncour of France, to urge the council of the League of Nations to speed up its machinery that is designed to terminate hostilities quickly. Hugh Gibson, American delegate, did his part by declaring, in the course of a debate on the desirability of exercising some sort of control over the armaments of participating nations, that his delegation would not present any obstacle to a discussion of armament problems which might have League of Nations aspects, though of course the Americans could not participate in such discussions.

Hungary submitted a memorandum to the commission complaining bitterly that, though she was practically disarmed, she is surrounded by a group of allied countries possessing powerful military forces—meaning the little entente. She gave warning that unless some general reduction of armament materialized Europe and the League of Nations would be gravely endangered. This protest is similar to one already made by Count von Bernstorff on behalf of Germany. Representatives of the little entente protested against the tenor of the Hungarian document, declaring it was virtually a petition for the revision of the treaty of Trianon, which, they contended, had no place in the deliberations of the disarmament commission.

ABD-EL-KRIM, leader of the Riffians, having lost his headquarters town of Targuist and being abandoned by many of his supporters, has given up the fight against the French and Spaniards. He made some peace proposals last week that were rejected by the French on the ground that he was merely playing for time, and the chieftain thereupon surrendered to the French, putting his person, his family and his property under their protection. Previous to this he returned all the French, Spanish and native prisoners who had been held in the Riff. It was said by Paris officials that Krim would be treated "with generosity but with prudence," which means he will be exiled from the Riff but maintained in suitable state.

MRS. JOHN D. SHERMAN, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, in her annual report to the convention of the federation in Washington, said that the specific objective of her presidential regime was the improvement of the American home so that "our people might be turned from their sad flight after irresponsible pleasure to a lasting satisfaction found in ideal life." Her recommendations included the establishment of a "General Federation Foundation" fund for special work; creation of a permanent federation board of trustees; an organized body of law observance and law administration for all departments, and support of legislation "in principle" rather than in the letter of the bill. About 5,000 women attended the convention. Mrs. Sherman and Mrs. Edward Franklin White of Indianapolis, first vice president, were re-elected. The new officers are Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole of Brockton, Mass., recording secretary, and Mrs. H. G. Reynolds of Paducah, Ky., treasurer.

CROWN PRINCE ADOLPHUS and Crown Princess Louise of Sweden with their large suite landed in New York Thursday and went immediately to Washington for the unveiling of the memorial to John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor. They are receiving all fitting official and social attentions and plan to make a tour of the country before returning home.

MT. TOKAICHI, a long quiescent volcano on Hokkaido island, Japan, suddenly erupted with disastrous results. Streams of lava poured over the countryside and there were numerous landslides. Hundreds of farmers were believed to have perished and at least one village was wiped out. A little later the Mayama Irregato reservoir in the Akita prefecture of northern Japan, burst its banks and swept away half of the town of Kitsura. The town had a population of 7,000 and it is feared that the casualty list may be heavy.

ACCORDING to a report just issued by the federal trade commission, the national wealth of the United States amounted to $353,000,000,000 in 1922, an apparent increase in the ten-year period of 72 per cent, but only 16 per cent when allowance is made for changes in the purchasing power of the dollar.

National income of the United States is estimated at $70,000,000,000 for the year 1923, which is somewhat less than the total in 1920, when it was $75,000,000,000, but more than in 1921, when, during that year of depression, it dropped to $53,000,000,000.

MARSHAL PILSUDSKI seems to have decided that Poland needs a dictatorship for about a year to give the national assembly time to revise the constitution. The election of a new President has been postponed for some days and the marshal himself apparently has consented to be one of the candidates. In order to impress the country with the fact that he had no intention of setting up a military dictatorship, Pilsudski ordered five regiments to leave Warsaw for their provincial garrisons. Americans who are engaged in extensive financial deals with the Polish government are much dissatisfied, and Minister Stetson suggested to Foreign Minister Valeski that America be kept better informed concerning the government of Poland and its plans.

Aviation Training to Be Largely Extended

Washington.—As a direct result of the numerous air investigations conducted in Washington during the last year, the War department announced that orders had been issued expanding aviation training throughout the whole army.

Added training in practical and theoretical flying will be given at West Point, all junior army officers will be offered ten hours actual experience in the air, and training will be given in all corps areas, at all general and special training schools, and in all the army branches.

In a pamphlet outlining the general air policy for the army, specific courses are laid out for the military academy, all officers who have been out of West Point less than 15 years, all infantry, field artillery, coast artillery, cavalry, and engineering schools.

Due to the lack of funds and the absence of legislation providing extra hazard compensation, a large part of the aerial program will be postponed until a later date. The air courses for special service schools, however, will begin at once.

For the present the flying will be confined to volunteers, but it is expected all junior officers will take the course.

"There is an obvious need," Secretary of War Davis said, "for a greater knowledge on the part of officers of the regular army of the capabilities and limitations of the air service."

Acquisition of Ed Weir, Nebraska's All-American tackle, to the staff of gridiron coaches at the Cornhusker institution, should have the proper influence on the players. A great player and a thorough gentleman on the field, Weir has two important coaching assets in his favor. As captain of the Nebraska eleven for the last two years he knew rules and realized how they are applied. He will be head line coach and is expected to be a great help to Nebraska.

Long Driver Reveals Reasons for Feat

Edward Blackwell, one of the world's longest hitters of a golf ball, gives the following four reasons why he is a long driver:

"In the first place I am a big, strong man; secondly, I use a big, powerful club; thirdly, I have a perfect swing, and, lastly, I hit as hard as I jolly well can."

Here are all the chief factors that go toward long driving. They are not very illuminating, neither are the simple formulas of Chick Evans and Ted Ray that the secret of long driving is just plain hard hitting.

GOLF PERFECTED BY PRACTICING

"Natural Born" Player Is Unknown to Game.

"I don't believe there is anything in golf that could be called natural," writes Bill Alves, a pro. "The game from start to finish is completely foreign to the muscles and athletic living conditions of the human.

"I can't say that I have ever known a golfer to be 'natural born.' Golf, to my way of thinking, must be acquired.

"The rhythm, swing, stance, backstroke, follow-through, et al., are out of our daily routine.

"To throw, to catch, to kick, etc., are only natural. Where does the golf stroke show up in the daily life?

"Golf is only perfected through practice. It is a game to which we must accustom ourselves through practice.

"The side swing is confusing, also trying to hit something lying on the ground is very muddling, inasmuch as the player doesn't move. Success would probably be more rapid if one could take a running start at the pill. He would start that momentum, which unconsciously puts weight behind the ball.

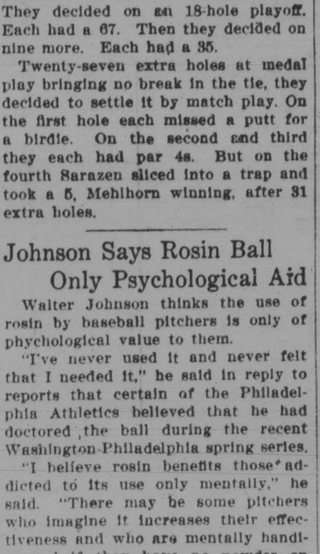
"All the best amateurs and professionals of today couldn't play any better than the average golfer when they started out at the game.

"Golf became a study with them and they developed their game far faster than the player who thinks he cannot play golf and will never learn.

"Hagen, Jones, Barnes, and the rest were just as big dubs as the modern dub of today.

"Golf, they say, is like a business, often it can be learned in a short length of time if the player would start learning the game instead of playing it."

Petty Is Sensation



Jess Petty of Los Angeles, although thirty-one years old, continues to pitch sensational ball for the Brooklyn Dodgers. The big left-hander is the outstanding pitcher of major-league baseball at the present time.

Bill Mehlhorn and Gene Sarazen in Close Game

The hardest fought match Larry Nabholtz, Cedarhurst pro, saw last winter during his southern visit was at Sebring over the Kennelworth Lodge course. Bill Mehlhorn and Gene Sarazen both came in with 281 cards. They decided on an 18-hole playoff. Each had a 67. Then they decided on nine more. Each had a 35.

Twenty-seven extra holes at medal play bringing no break in the tie, they decided to settle it by match play. On the first hole each missed a putt for a birdie. On the second and third they each had par 4s. But on the fourth Sarazen sliced into a trap and took a 5, Mehlhorn winning, after 31 extra holes.

Johnson Says Rosin Ball Only Psychological Aid

Walter Johnson thinks the use of rosin by baseball pitchers is only of phychological value to them.

"I've never used it and never felt that I needed it," he said in reply to reports that certain of the Philadelphia Athletics believed that he had doctored the ball during the recent Washington-Philadelphia spring series.

"I believe rosin benefits those addicted to its use only mentally," he said. "There may be some pitchers who imagine it increases their effectiveness and who are mentally handicapped if they have no powder on their hands."

Consecutive Games

When Glenn Wright, Pittsburgh's star shortstop, was kept out of the line-up the other day, due to an injury, it brought to a halt a nifty string of consecutive games Wright had played since coming to the majors. Wright broke in with the Pirates in the spring of 1924. He played every inning of every game that year—153 tilts. Last season Wright again took part in every brush on the Smoky Town's club's schedule—153. That made 306 straight frays.

Dances With a Purpose

"Gopher dances" in Montana are not, as one might suppose, frolics of the rodents. They are dances given for the purposes of raising money to kill ground squirrels. Much vacant land was infested with the rodents, and as there was no fund from which poisoned grain could be supplied to take care of these lands and protect adjacent privately owned ground after it was cleaned up, the people hit upon this novel method of raising the necessary money.

When prosperity comes to a man his wife thinks she must live up to it and a little beyond.

KIWANIS CONVENTION

IN MONTREAL this week some eight or nine thousand representatives of Kiwanis clubs throughout the United States and Canada are meeting for discussing ways and means of improving conditions in every way; in business; in social intercourse; and in international relations. Especially will attention be given to improving the condition of the child who whether by reason of physical or mental defect or because of the condition of his parents or the environment in which he has been born, has not the privileges which are the right of every normal child.

What does it mean when these thousands of busy businessmen, many of them leaders in the nation's financial armies spend time which to them means money and spend their money as well to meet once a year and discuss means of aleviating the suffering of the child of the drunken beggar who is in jail, or the crippled son of parents too poor to give proper medical aid? And not only at the convention but throughout the year these men and others, members of the Rotary, Exchange and other service clubs are devoting time and money throughout the year to the same end.

Well, it simply means this, that after man has rubbed elbows with his brother man on this old ball for millions of years, he has within the past century come to the realization that the other man is really a part of scheme of things, and is entitled to his consideration.

For centuries the poor have been taken care of. In the Bible we read of alms being thrown to the beggar at the gate and the alms house was an institution in Europe and England before Columbus discovered this continent. It remained for the service clubs, however, to do what the tossing of a coin to a beggar or what the almshouse have never done, and will never do—adding a human friendly interest and desire to help, not financially alone, but with the personal touch which sometimes means more than dollars.

If such clubs as the Kiwanis, the Rotary or Exchange had thrived in England in the last century as they do here today, there would have been no theme for the vivid picturizations of Charles Dickens. If the master of Dotheboys' Hall had been a Kiwanian, we imagine that Oliver Twist would have found conditions at the school far different. If Bounderby had imbibed the principles of a service organization Stephen Blackpool would not have had to end his life a fugitive from the very system which should have protected him. Nor if Scrouge had belonged to such a club would he have turned away the two gentlemen who on Christmas eve came to his office for money to aid the poor. And had such clubs as the Exchange and the Kiwanis existed in London when the Fleet Street Prison was overburdened with prisoners put there for small debts which they were unable to pay, we think that those clubs would have seen to it that litte Dorritt would have been put in a better environment than the blank walls of the prison yard.

It was stated at the convention of the Kiwanis club this year that if such organizations had existed a hundred years ago that the Civil war would not have occurred. More than this, we believe thta if such organizations had existed from the beginning of the human race that some of the darkest pages of history and the times, darker yet, which have never been paged; the cruelties and inhumanities of every day life would have been cut to a minimum.

The service clubs of this nation are performing a work which other types of institutions are unable to perform, at least in the same degree, and are making the world better for their having existed. May they prosper.

TEACH MORE KINDNESS

A NUMBER OF STATES have enacted laws, requiring that a small portion of time be devoted each week in public schools to the teaching of kindness to animals. These laws are not generally observed. In the higher institutions of learning the subject is never mentioned, and cruel practices in sports and hazing are tolerated. As a prelude to abolishing war, we need more kindness taught by precept and example.

It is important that children should be taught the care of household pets, and especially regularity in feeding and watering. This is not only humane education, but incidentally it is teaching children continuous application, than which there is no more important humane lesson to be learned. Teach children that all living creatures should be treated as they themselves would be treated. Consideration for dumb animals is a mark of humanity which is all too rare in the human race.

Past Record Warrants Return

THE enactment of the Japanese Exclusion Law was the best piece of legislation for California ever placed on the federal statutes, for by it the yellow race is forever barred from California's golden shores. Future generations need have no fear from being crowded out of their birthright by the Little Brown man. Samuel M. Shortridge, who seeks reelection to the United States Senate, is the father of that law and it was through his efforts that the bill was passed and signed by the president. He introduced it in the senate and watched its devious course until it reached the hands of the president. By the persuasive arguments of the senator it was signed and became a law. If for no other reason but this, Senator Shortridge should be given a unanimous vote for re-election by the people of the state. Future generations will glorify him and erect monuments to his memory for removing the Japanese menace from California. The passage of the exclusion law is the biggest feather in the senator's cap. The people of the state will be ungrateful if they do not give him a rousing vote of appreciation.

INSPECTOR OF MILK EXPLAINS HIS WORK

By J. J. Garland, County Milk Inspector

That the work of the county milk inspection department is not clearly understood by the public was illustrated recently when a bottle of milk was brought to the laboratory with the request that we determine whether or not there were tuberculosis bacteria present. The milk inspection department is very willing to test samples of milk and anxious to assist any one in determining the quality of milk they are buying, however, the laboratory is not equipped to make a positive identification of any specific organisms.

Your county milk laboratory along with the other state approved inspection departments is only prepared to grade milk and make quantative analysis of the bacteria content. The state pure milk law has set certain standards as regards the number of bacteria in milk, its butter fat and total solids and our laboratory facilities only enable us to determine if the milk sold in the county meets these requirements. No one should become alarmed at the idea that milk contains bacteria for under normal conditions these organisms are non-pathogenic and some are even beneficial to health

To be able to say with certainty that a disease producing or pathogenic organism is persent in a sample of milk, calls for a complicated laboratory proceedure and the inoculation of Guinea pigs with a pure culture of the suspected bacteria. The Guinea pig is later on killed and autopsied to determine if any of its glands are infected. Laboratory cultures are then made from the diseased tissues, if any are found and from these cultures or growths of the bacteria on certain foods known as media, the organism is identified by means of delicate stains and miscropic examinations.

The process of pasteurization, however, kills any pathogenic bacteria should they be present in milk and as most of the milk consumed is so treated, the public health is safeguarded. One of the functions of the county milk inspection service is to see that this pasteurizing of milk is carefully and thoroughly accomplished also that the milk be first produced and later distributed under sanitary conditions.

Of interest may be a report on the tests being regularly made on milk from the county farm after it is delivered for use at the Community hospital. For the past several months this raw milk has been found to equal in quality the most carefully produced certified milk. This speaks exceedingly well for the manner in which it is produced and handled at the county farm, where there is practically none of the equipment found necessary on dairies producing a guaranteed or certified grade of milk.

Early in the month the inspector was called to Sacramento as a witness for the State in a case involving one of the local dairymen who has been negligent in complying with the dairy law. From the hearing held there, we may expect him to improve conditions on his dairy.

A total of 104 samples of milk were tested at the laboratory and the necessary farm and plant inspections made. There were $161.25 in fees paid into the county treasurer by the milk distributors during the month.

GOV. RICHARDSON ANNOUNCES HIS CANDIDACY

Governor Friend W. Richardson, in a lengthy statement issued last week, announces his candidacy for reelection. He will have as opponents, C. C. Young, Rex Goodcell and Mr. McClellan, chairman of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county. The governor has redeemed his economy pledge to the people and hopes to be reelected on that platform. His statment summarized in the first paragraph of his long recital of the achievements of his administration. It is as follows:

"Responding to the request of many citizens, I have decided to file a petition as a candidate for governor. This course has been determined upon, not from any desire for political or personal honors, but because of the general demand from the people that I continue to serve them as governor.

"having risen from a poor boy to the chief executive of the state I have no desire for further honors or a continuance in political life. But the people of California have been most kind to me in the past and now that they ask a continuance of the policies of government for which my administration stands, I cannot fail in my duty, and hence will seek re-election in order that economy and efficiency, the maintenance of law and order and business in government may continue."

SCIENTIST CREATES LIVING CELL

The creation of life, the transforming inanimate matter into living matter, is an idea which has always intrigued writers and scientists The story of "Frankenstein", Maughm's novel, "The Magician," and many other books deal with the subject in fiction form. But only recently has such fiction been given some basis of fact. Dr. D. T. MacDougal, diretor of the Carnegie Institution of Washington's laboratories for plant physiology, has succeeded in producing a living organism from dead material.

Dr. MacDougal's experiments are concerned with the lowest form of life, the living cell. September 9, 1895, hydro-electric energy was first transmitted 21 miles from Folsom to Sacramento.

The Folsom plant was connected with a steam plant at Sacramento, giving that city two sources of supply.

This world-renowned achievement began the development of an electrical system that has materially aided agricultural, industrial, and social development.

Today, interconnection is complete from Oregon to Mexico, from Nevada to the Pacific. Surplus power is available where any shortage might exist. All sections of the state and its people are benefited.

Since 1913 the average per capita cost of living increased 65%, while the average cost of electricity decreased 8%

"The Greater Glory" Is June Mathis' Super Drama

A picture of post-war Vienna, once the gayest city in the Austrian Empire, is shown in "The Greater Glory," June Mathis' super-feature for First National release. The picture will be shown at the Sequoia Theatre next Monday and Tuesday, June 14 and 15

"The Greater Glory" is an daptation of Edith O'Shaughnessy's famous novel, "The Viennese Medley." More than a year was spent on its production by Miss Mathis and a large company.

Miss Mathis, well-known screen writer, produced "The Greater Glory." She is famous for preparing the script of "The Four Horsemen," which also brought renown to Rex Inyram and Rudolph Valentino.

The picture shows the changes in the lives of a well-to-do Viennese family before and after the war. The senes in the pcture are authentic, and give a new insight into conditions in war-wrecked Austria not hitherto revealed.

Heading an exceedingly large cast are Anna Q. Nilsson, Conway Tearle, Ian Keith, May Allison, Jean Hersholdt and Lucy Beaumont. Miss Beaumont, a comparitive newomer to the screen, portrays a remarkable character, that of a kindly, unworldly maiden aunt who is the protecting angel of a large family of relatives and friends. More than 300 character women were tried out for the part before Miss Beaumont was selected.

Cur Rehfeld directed the production. This is his first picture, although he has been associated with the screen for more than a decade.

"WOMANHANDLED," "LET'S GET MARRIED" AND NOW "SAY IT AGAIN"

The third Richard Dix success in a row is a record to be proud of. Yet, that is just what Director Gregory La Cave has achieved Starting with "Womanhandled," his name on the billing became something to think about. "Let's Get Married" proved the first film was not just a "flash in the pan." Now "Say It Again," Richard's third Paramount comedy to be directed by La Cava, which comes to the Sequoia Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, June 16 and 17th, definitely proves him to be no longer a "comer" but instead, one who is very much (arrived."

Mr. La Cava has had an unusual career. He started out to be a painter, later became a newspaper cartoonist, and then made animated cartoons for the movies.

Little more than a year ago, La Cava joined Paramount. He helped on "Too Many Kisses." directed scenes for Dix's "The Shock Punch" on the steel framework of the unfinished New York Telephone Company building, and took charge of the racing scenes in "The Lucky Devil."

Cleaning Without Odor by the
F. Thomas Process

Our many years of experience has taught us that it is impossible to do perfect cleaning with cheap, inferior methods. That is why we found it necessary to invest nearly $500,000 in the equipment of a plant and the establishment of an expert organization to do the quality of work demanded by our customer.

With the "F. THOMAS PROCESS we do not only remove every particle of dust but we return your garments without that usual disagreeable smell of gasoline Every drop of gasoline we use in cleaning is redistilled and very highly refined.

Raw gasoline — the kind that you buy fo you automobile — is full of heavy oils and unfit for cleaning fabrics. It is little better than ordinary distillate and leaves a sickening gasoline smell in your clothes.

Prospects

Caleb secured an amiable, steady-gaited saddle horse for his trip the next morning.

He carried his creel, an awkward thing to a rider of his lack of experience. In it he packed his lunch and a survey instrument or two with notebook and drawing materials. In his rod case, another cumbersome thing for him to carry, he included besides the joints of his pole a steel rod that he had secured at a blacksmith's in the upper valley, a tempered probe to be used for investigating depths of deposits. He had a geologist's hammer in one pocket, in another pipe and tobacco. His camera was tied to the saddle.

Leisurely he rode down the valley, diverging sometimes and climbing a ridge, probing with his steel rod, taking photographs, making a contour sketch where the camera would not serve his purpose, marking closely the lip of strata, the character of rock formations, the general lie of the country. Finally, close to noon, he rode down a wash, the sides of which were clothed in buckeye and oak, and lunched by the side of Boca creek, where the two sycamores made an archway for its waters.

He took the pendant from its packing and laid it in the palm of his hands. The artificer had done well. The tiny fishes, united by the ribbon, were delicately yet sharply cut.

Two fish united. A symbol of two living things that lived and moved in the same medium—water. Joined by a ribbon. Pisces and Aquarius. A swift suggestion came to him that the symbol might indicate more than he had intended when he ordered the trinket. He flushed a little as he wondered whether the girl might devise some intimate intention in the design. Then he laughed at his own presumption. It was her sign. Its connection with that on his own seal was fanciful, far-fetched.

He put the pendant back, got up, rolled his blanket, saddled and rode out into Caliente Sink, turning south along the creek, on through the canyon to the suspension bridge. There he dismounted and led his horse down the bank to the edge of the creek. He took off his roll and thrust the blanket and raincoat into the hollow of a tree that was masked with ferns, together with his creel and rod case. Unencumbered, he loped on to El Nido.

"This is my party call," he announced to Betty, who came to meet him, after Padilla, with a smile of greeting, had led away his mount for a grain feed and a promised rub-down and Maria had shown him into the patio.

The girl looked grave, seemed quiet, he fancied. But she brightened at the gift and accepted it without reserve.

"Is this really my sign?" she asked. "One would think that I was a twin.

"It was very thoughtful and original of you to choose this. I shall like it best of all my gifts. Something made for me, something that belongs, if we are to credit the astrologers. Do you know, we have an old volume that treats of such nonsense. Father will be pleased, too." Her own pleasure was so open and earnest that Caleb felt his satisfaction growing. He was glad she appreciated his taste.

They discussed the picnic and her friends, in friendly fashion. Thurston had returned to his Fresno vineyards. The Vedders, it seemed, had liked Caleb and wanted to see more of him. Carmen had reiterated her determination to insist upon a new beret from him. "If it was only a souvenir of the occasion," she had said. Betty appeared inclined to tease him a little about the impression he had made on Carmen.

"I am afraid I shall not see much of Miss Wilson," he said. "I expect to be very busy shortly."

She did not inquire specifically what he meant and he did not volunteer it. He did not mean to discuss his discovery with anyone until it was an accomplished fact—unless it became necessary in the order of business. Later he might have to broach the subject to Betty and her father.

At the end of an hour he rose to go and the girl ordered his horse saddled.

She gave him her hand, cool and slim but with the grip that told of efficiency, and he rode off. He left the direct trail to the canyon and mounted to a low rolling ridge that paralleled the stream. His eyes roved the valley, looking again for the beachmarks he had noted on his first visit.

And then he saw from the height what his previous trails had hidden from him—the grove of cedars about a low white railing and, within the fence, some white headstones—the three-generations cemetery of the Clintons.

He frowned a little at the sight, remembering the girl's declaration. But he did not forego his present purpose. He was firm in his belief that public service was greater than private sentiment and he hoped that he could overcome the feelings of the father and daughter when the time came. If this obstacle had to be surmounted, it should be. He was strong in his conviction that he would overcome all hindrances to his great project, that already promised too much to be abandoned.

It was nearing twilight when he came to the gorge. He considered it best not to risk a fire. He did not want his operations observed until he had come to a conclusion concerning them. He believed himself outside the bounds of the Clinton property, but he was not certain. If he was trespassing, he felt that Clinton and his daughter, in their present moods of resolution regarding any disposition of Hermanos valley, might resent what he was about, if they guessed its import, as a breach of hospitality.

He felt a little uneasy about his ethics. What he was about was for the public weal; it outweighed private considerations, he told himself, hammering home the argument. Hermanos valley was a private holding, yet, if public necessity demanded it for a dam site, public pressure, leading perhaps to legislative procedure, might insist upon condemnation proceedings.

But, if Clinton did not yield gracefully, the affair would create quite a stir, and Caleb would appear to Betty and her father in the light of a treacherous guest who had taken advantage of their hospitality to spy out the land. They would hold him responsible for ultimate condemnation and the desecration of the little graveyard.

The face of Betty Clinton, hurt, indignant, scornful, rose up before him. Perhaps he might be able to argue them to his standpoint, though he knew that idea was hardly tenable. He wanted her good will. Some instinct, entirely foreign to what he would have described as good Yankee common sense, whispered that his sentiment toward her was deeper-rooted than he imagined. That it might ripen into love. A love that might be reciprocated and that would be well worth while.

"I Am Not in Love With Her," Caleb Said Half Aloud.

"I am not in love with her," Caleb said, half aloud. And, as he said it, he knew that the girl could not be dropped out of his life without leaving a wound that would ache long after it had become a scar. He was in the grip of complex emotions. Brain pointed out the importance of the project, born of his own talents, made possible by his talents. And the sex instinct, the desire of one woman, wrestled with the offspring of his intellect. Brain and heart were at odds.

But two things had come plainly out of the muddle. He wanted to carry out the work. That was a thing that should be done—if he did not someone else would, sooner or later, make the same discovery. And he wanted Betty Clinton. It was not that he merely did not want to lose her respect and friendship—he wanted her. The desire of her continually inhibited concentration on his project.

He woke before dawn, moved his horse to a better patch for browsing, took his probe and geologist's hammer and started to work, resolutely dismissing any aftermath of the night's problem. He had not brought wading boots with him and he took off shoes and socks and puttees, turned up the laced ends of his riding breeches and waded out into the gut where the pent-up waters of Hermanos, when the valley was a lake, had broken through.

The sun was two hours high before he came out of the creek, his pockets filled with rock samples, wet, tired, his purpose accomplished. He had still to refer to certain geological reports, to analyze his samples, but he was sure of the result.

His jaw was set and his face grave from concentration, but it shone with a certain satisfaction.

"That problem is solved," he said aloud as he mounted his horse at last and rode the willing steed down canyon toward the breakfast that both craved. He did not notice the man who came out on the suspension bridge and watched him until the foliage shut him from view.

It was Padilla. The Mexican's face was puzzled, suspicious. He could not understand why el senor should have stayed the night at the head of the canyon. He descended to the creek bed, readily finding evidence of what Caleb had been doing, evidence that a day or so would have erased. He saw where Caleb had gone down into the stream and his quick eyes noted where the rocks had been chipped. A convulsion came over his face with the sudden conviction that the guest had been up to no good.

"The dam' Gringo, Yankee spy!" he muttered. But his thoughts were twisted. He remembered Caleb's gallant action with the bull. He could not justify the two affairs. And he could not comprehend what Caleb had been up to. Unless it was mining. And there was no gold on Gabilan, no silver or cinnabar. Save that, whatever he had done, he had accomplished secretly, deliberately giving out the impression that he had gone down the canyon the night before. He decided to talk the matter over with Maria.

For four days Caleb worked day and night, almost unceasingly. Every night he practiced his qualities as Water Diviner. He cut his own hazel twigs and, as soon as the moon was up, he went out on the desolate surface of the Sink, with results that justified his first impressions. There was water everywhere. It backed up to the southern border and the presence of the water proved that clay lay under it. This he verified by finding clay on the side hills with his boring probe. His cistern had walls as well as bottom, a lining that was impervious. It was a giant clay saucer holding water for the population of a whole city.

At the end of the time he was worn lean and tired in body. Sleep had been snatched in catnaps through the day, before the moon came up and in the early hours of dawn. He returned to the hotel, gave up his horse and slept luxuriously for thirty hours. But, before he went to bed, he dispatched a telegram. It was to his lawyer in the East, to whom he had given certain powers-of-attorney concerning the possible sale of his house. In the message he urged an instant sale, even at some slight sacrifice, and asked for the wired remittance of the price through his Golden bank.

Quick with enthusiasm, he went back to Golden, fully rested, to complete plans for submission to Cox. The latter, he found, was out of town and not expected for two weeks. This suited Caleb, who had much to do. He hired a small office and equipped it with drafting table, desk, a small filing cabinet and two stools.

He had to set his plans on paper, to make drawings, put together rough estimates, and he resolved to make a working model of the whole project. He did not anticipate being able to do more than suggest the magnitude of the affair and its cost. What he mainly hoped for was to prove its practicability, and the model would go far toward that.

Woman Decries Value of Ancient Precept

"Sometimes I think precepts do more harm than good," said the woman, as, with flushed cheeks she threw down a dress she had been working on all day. "For instance, I had it drilled into me in my youth, 'Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today,' and I actually suffer for it.

"Many times it would be much better to put things off until tomorrow, but I feel that old precept driving me. In illustration: It would have been much better if I had put by this dress until tomorrow, for I've worked on it too long already. But no, I kept plugging along, and now I've made a bad blunder on it.

"Again and again I am overtired or overnervous for a certain task, but that old precept keeps dinging in my ears, and I attempt today what would be much better attempted tomorrow. In the case of important decisions, too, I think it is much better generally to sleep on the problem, but somehow I feel as if putting off until tomorrow was a sin and I often decide with hasty judgment.

"I know that lazy people often put off until tomorrow, believing someone will do the task for them, and of course they're very negligent and slack—but sometimes their system is best to follow."—Springfield Union.

Point of View of Sexes

Three great women, George Eliot, Emily Browning and George Sand, said the principal genius of woman lies in the depth of her affection. A woman is no more superior to a man than a man is to a woman, says the lecturer, Miss Sime. What is strong in man is weak in woman and vice versa, but in Miss Sime's opinion civilization had and was undergoing three phases. The first, before feminism came in, was the age of chivalry when men treated women as spiritual beings and desired to shield and protect them. The second was an appreciation of woman and her desire for equality. The third would be the chivalry of woman toward man in an attempt to understand his point of view. . . . Perhaps that will have to be the way of it. Man hasn't been able to get hers.—Capper's Weekly.

Muffling Oars

Oars are muffled by wrapping something around them where they come in contact with the oarlocks. This is to deaden the noise. When Paul Revere started on his famous midnight ride to Lexington a petticoat was used to muffle the oars of the boat in which he crossed the Charles river. It is referred to in the following unique sentence in "The Battle of April 19, 1775," written by Frank Coburn: "Fear that the noise of the oars in the oarlocks might alarm the sentry, Revere dispatched one of his companions for something to muffle them with, who soon returned with a petticoat, yet warm from the body of a fair daughter of liberty."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Secret Service

"What's this?" asked the boss as his stenog laid a box on his desk.

"Why, they're the envelopes you told me to get while I was in the department store," replied his stenog.

"Great Scott!" exclaimed the boss, "I meant for you to get them in the stationery department."

"Oh," giggled the stenog. "I thought your wife had asked you to make a purchase and you were too bashful to go yourself."

SMART TAILORED MILLINERY; OUTFITTING LITTLE FOLKS

PARIS sends to us, in terms of these five fascinating, new street hats, the latest word of five world-famous modistes as to tailored millinery. They are gossipy messages, all of them emphasizing the disappearance of the mannish note in headwear and the return of dignified types in street clothes.

One glance at this little galaxy of stars in the millinery sky, reveals that the combination of straw braids and millinery fabrics makes a strong appeal to French designers. Every one of these models is an example of fabrics used in the body of the hat, and, in three out of five, fabric and straw are combined to make the shape.

GROUP OF TAILORED HATS

The group pictured, leads off with a black satin hat faced with milan straw. The shape is in line with the big majority of others intended for street wear and turns up at the back. Rose foliage is arranged about the crown and a few leaves extend to the crown on the right side, where a single rose is posed on the brim. Rose foliage is used in flat collars also, with the leaves regular in arrangement (the tip of one overlapping the base of another) and finished with two small, flat roses. Velvet ribbon with silk accounts for the hat with draped crown at the left and satin, in three shades, makes the interesting model at the right. The upturned brim with wings at the side, is covered with fine folds of satin, shading from light to darker tone and small blossoms almost cover the side pieces.

The most original and spirited hat in the group has a high crown of milan straw and an eccentric taffeta-covered brim that makes the most of the fashionable upward turn at the back. Crisp taffeta ribbon is used in the buoyant bow and drapery. The plainest hat in the group is similar in shape. It is a milan with a brim that folds in a plait at the back and has a collar and facing of satin.

Outfitting little folks has become a simple matter, thanks to the manufacturers of clothes for children. Ready-made things for little tots are so excellent and so low-priced that there is no economy in making their ordinary everyday garments at home. This is accounted for by the stupendous quantities turned out by the factories and by their methods of quick and economical production, high-speed power machines and expert operators. Mothers cannot compete with this quantity production of little garments that are well made and of sturdy materials. The fields of hand-made clothes and tailored things are different and thereby hangs another story.

There are few style changes in little tots' clothes from season to season. Designers vary the patterns in materials used and the decorations, or promote certain colors and fabrics, but the same dependable cottons, linens and silks reappear every season. In cottons this year there are new patterns in the English prints, in voiles and crepes. Plain broadcloth, chambray, poplin, linene and ginghams appear in popular colors; batiste and dimity are woven in dainty stripes and cross-bars and percales are shown in quiet colors and inconspicuous stripes or figures. The keynote of the styles in this season's children's clothes is dauntiness and neatness. The simplest needlework is used for decorative touches, as feather stitching, scallops, tiny embroidered flowers and outline stitch for sketching amusing figures on pockets. Little Japanese figures are popular—lanterns, parasols and people—and so are birds, bunnies, chickens and puppies—done in outline or cross-stitch.

FOR THE SUMMER PASTIMES

For wear on the beach there are coats and capes of cotton toweling or cotton chenille; cut-out flowers or figures in the same fabrics but contrasting colors make amusing decorations for them or pictures representing beach sports are sketched on them with gay-colored cotton floss. Some little beach coats are entirely covered with cut-out applique figures. Bathing suits are knitted in one piece and made usually in bright colors. Sweaters are important items in little folks' outfits, and are shown in all colors, but peach, tan and yellow tones are featured, and overalls are never omitted from the equipment of happy youngsters.

Coat Achieves Distinction

Navy and red are combined effectively in a frock with suggested yolk line at the hips. Plaits on the sides give width to the skirt and the little flare cuffs lend a piquant air.

Smart Overblouse

Plaid taffeta in green and blue makes a very smart blouse to wear with a blue suit. The fabric is fringed to form the finish on the edge of the peplum and at the collar.

The Crown's the Thing

The newest hats from Paris show a tendency to do away with the brim entirely and focus all the attention on the crown, which is folded and draped and in some cases forms a wide halo about the face.

It's Effective

The embroidery of this season has much color but small, conservative designs. Beading follows the same theory of composition.

SEASONABLE FOODS

Those acquainted with only the cultivated and canned mushrooms, do not realize the rare flavor of the fried variety. They are found in abundance now and up to the time of frosts which kill them. It is better to buy them in the market, if you have no knowledge of the edible varieties, than to risk being poisoned. The field mushroom, if brushed and peeled, the cap dressed with a spoonful of butter and broiled over coals or under gas, is delicious. Served alone on buttered toast, the mushroom is at its best, as many food flavors confuse its delicate taste. Cooked in butter for five minutes, cream added and served as a supper dish, it is unsurpassed as a dainty.

Hash.—Take chopped beef either cooked or raw, add butter and a chopped onion to a hot frying pan, now add twice as much chopped cooked potato as meat, a teaspoonful of grated horseradish, or less, and salt and pepper to season. Add cream from time to time to moisten and cook until well blended. Serve like an omelet, rolled out on a hot platter and garnished with parsley.

Cheese and Olives Canape.—Cut stale bread into one-quarter inch slices. Shape with a small oblong cutter with rounded corners. Cream, butter and add an equal quantity of soft rich cheese; season with salt. Spread the bread and garnish with one-quarter inch border of finely chopped olives and pieces of red and green pepper cut into fancy shapes in the center of each.

Moravian Apple Pie.—Core and peel six even-sized apples. Place in a covered pan with a teaspoonful of lemon juice, a little of the grated rind, a cupful of sugar and water enough to cover the bottom of the dish. Stew until tender. Line a deep pastry plate with rich pastry, place the apples in it, fill the center with peach marmalade and cover with latticed strips of pastry. Bake in a hot oven and serve with cream.

Berry Cake.—Sift together a teaspoonful of soda with two cupfuls of flour. In another bowl put one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of shortening and warm it enough to cream it easily; add the yolk of one egg, one whole egg, beat well, add one teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful of cloves. Mix well and add one cupful of canned berries, juice and fruit, stir well. Now mix with the flour mixture and bake in a loaf. Ice with the egg white left, using one cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of water and boil until it hairs, pour over the beaten white and continue beating until cool and stiff enough to spread over the cake.

Soups of Summer Fruits.

With those who are used to serving fruit soups they are considered a very important part of the menu. They are not much used in America, but we are beginning to like and appreciate them.

In the Old world the prince and peasant enjoy them summer and winter. Chilled with shaved ice they appeal to our taste, and serve an attractive beginning to a summer meal. With fruit soups the ingredients used with the fruit juice make them more or less nourishing.

Strawberry and Orange Soup.—Sprinkle a pint of strawberries with sugar and let stand on ice for an hour. Make a sirup with one and one-half quarts of water and a pound of sugar with a quart of fresh berries and the juice of a lemon. Mash and strain, add a cupful of orange juice and the prepared berries and serve ice cold.

Apple and Rice Soup.—Core and slice very thin eight unpeeled apples. Cook them with a half cupful of rice in two quarts of boiling water until both rice and fruit are soft. Put through a sieve, add spice and one-half cupful of orange or grapefruit marmalade. Serve hot.

Prune and Peach Soup.—Take one-third of a pound of dried prunes and two-thirds of a pound of dried peaches, soak over night. In the morning add a pint of cold water and let them cook until boiling, add two tablespoonfuls of sago and cook until the sago is clear. Add a cupful of cherry, cranberry or other tart juice. Serve hot or cold.

Cherry and Quince Soup.—Stem and stone a pint of deep-red cherries; place them in a saucepan with the juice and rind of a lemon, half a cupful of quince juice and a pint of water. Cook until the cherries are tender, then thicken slightly with cornstarch and cook until the starch is well cooked. Serve hot.

Wafers, sweet crackers and various small pastries may be served with such soups

150 Years of American Independence

AMERICA this year celebrates its one hundred fiftieth year of independence. And today the world knows that the immortal instrument which was signed on July 4, 1776, has meant much more than the growth and development of an independent nation on this side of the Atlantic.

With 1925 there began a series of American sesquicentennials which continues to command the attention of the world. They mark the beginning of the United States of America. Americans are interested.

For world history, as well as American history, was made at Lexington and Concord April 19, 1775; at Cambridge July 3, 1775; at Philadelphia July 4, 1776; at Vincennes February 25, 1779; at Yorktown October 9, 1781; at Paris September 3, 1783.

Born in those fateful nine years of revolution, our nation today, after 150 years of perseverance and progress, is the most favored on earth, the most powerful, the wealthiest.

So much has been taken here as a matter of course that it seems hard to realize that this anniversary is celebrated in the very England from which liberty was wrested, and that observances of it are officially ordered in many lands beyond the seas. The Fourth of July has become international in scope, for it has changed the governments of nations whose capitals are far from Independence hall.

Had not the ideas of government held by the colonists been essentially British there would probably never have been any Declaration of Independence. It is as natural for the Briton to demand his rights as it is for him to live. The war of the Revolution was largely due to the fact that the three thousand miles of water between London and the colonies caused parliament to lose sight of the ties of consanguinity and of race.

Although the original thirteen colonies were so essentially English in thought and feeling they had never actually been established by England as a national enterprise. The only one which had ever received any official aid whatever was Georgia, and that was not sufficient to carry any such feeling of dependence as is essential for the preservation of intimate colonial relations. The right to colonize the North American continent had been granted by charters from a British king. According to the feudal system, which was then rapidly becoming effaced, the king owned all the land and distributed it among various favored vassals.

The sovereign in the same way regarded the New World as if it had been won by the sword. The most extravagant ideas prevailed with regard to the wealth of the American lands. It was at one time soberly believed in England that gold and silver and precious stones could be had for the taking and that the natives were the possessors of fabulous wealth. The king gave the charters in most cases with the idea that he would profit greatly from mines which would yield enormous returns to the royal exchequer.

When the colonists came here they found it necessary to make good their titles either by peaceful bargains with the Indians or by force of arms. From the very first the spirit of independence was fostered, for fiefs which had to be maintained by constant vigilance and negotiations and by show of force did not carry with them a deep sense of obligation. Indeed, even at that early day, although for the throne the colonists entertained feelings of loyalty and devotion, a shrewd idea was abroad that the king did not really own the land which he had bestowed by his charter. The conquest of nature and of the savages begot a rugged independence which as the years went by became more and more distasteful to the authorities in England.

Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, offered the independence resolution in June, 1776, and a committee was appointed to draft the Declaration, consisting of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert Livingston. Jefferson wrote the document, and alterations were made principally at the suggestion of Franklin and Adams. The paper was submitted to congress on June 28. It was laid on the table until July 1, when nine colonies voted in favor of it.

The independence resolution was actually adopted on July 2 and promulgated to the world on July 4, when John Hancock, of Massachusetts, affixed to it his bold signature.

The other members of the congress did not sign it until August 2, and the impressive scene connected with the signing was not witnessed until nearly a month later, although it is popularly associated with the Fourth of July.

Centuries of the progress of the rights of man bear witness in the Declaration. That "all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," was not new, for it was recognized at Sinai. That governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed had been stated and restated in many ways since the beginning of the colonies. Thomas Jefferson was criticised at the time for lack of originality in the Declaration. The document gained all the greater force from its statement of self-evident truths. Never was there a more masterly presentation of a bill of grievances than is contained in the Declaration, which "submits the facts to a candid world."

In 1876 the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence was celebrated with impressive exercises both in New York and Philadelphia. In 1826 was celebrated the fiftieth anniversary. Several of the original signers of the immortal document were still alive, although unable on account of extreme age to take part in the exercises to which they had been bidden. New York had a grand procession and a barbecue in the square now named after Washington, at which 10,000 persons were present. Josiah Quincy was the orator of the day in Boston, and addresses also were made by Webster and Peabody.

And now in 1926 we have the Sesquicentennial exposition at Philadelphia, open from June 1 to December 1. To it will come the nations of the world co-operating with us in our celebration, which has been designed to demonstrate that what fifty years ago was merely potential is today an accomplished fact.

Five main exhibition buildings, three of them colossal in size, house the great mass of exhibits that have originated in all parts of America and of the world. A score or more of smaller buildings, each of individual character, contain displays of foreign countries and separate states of the Union.

At the main entrance to the grounds are two pylons, 55 feet high, surmounted by colossal figures to be known as the Heralds of the New Dawn. They are symbolic of the story of American freedom. The visitor enters the Grand court and finds to his left, the Palace of Liberal Arts and Manufacturers and the Palace of Agriculture and Food Products. Between them stands the imposing Tower of Liberty, more than 200 feet high and surmounted by the Light of Independence, symbolizing the inspired vision of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

The Palace of Liberal Arts and Manufactures contains seven acres of display space. All that human ingenuity creates from raw materials will find place in this building. Pottery and glass, textiles, furniture, silverware, cutlery and countless articles in everyday use will be exhibited. Modern methods of communication will be demonstrated by exhibits featuring the telephone, the telegraph, wireless and radio. The art of the printer and of the bookbinder will interest many by the novel displays arranged.

The Palace of Agriculture, Food, Civic and Foreign exhibits provides eight acres of exhibition space. Half of the building will be devoted to agricultural and food exhibits, including practically everything edible by man or beast. Methods of cultivation and preparation for market; proper selection, combination and preparation of foods; and extensive dairy, canning, yeast, baking and other displays are being featured. Adjacent to the palace a great live-stock show will be held September 12 to 19.

The other portion of the immense structure will house a number of exhibits from far-away lands not represented by their own buildings in the foreign section of the exposition. In this part of the palace are interesting displays prepared by commercial organizations and civic bodies throughout the country.

Educational exhibits from foreign countries as well as from all parts of the United States are displayed in the Palace of Education and Social Economy. The Palace of Fine Arts provides two acres of space in which are housed art treasures that include the work of many famous masters.

Lighting arrangements for the exposition are unique. Several outstanding features, once seen, will never be forgotten. Before the entrance gates will swing an immense Liberty bell containing 26,000 incandescent lamps of 500,000 candle power. It will be 70 feet high, 50 feet across and will weigh 42 tons. The bell will be suspended 22 feet above the street level. Concentration of 15,000,000,000 candle power and the massing of 26 superpower searchlights fitted with projectors and color screens to throw fan-like and criss-cross rays of rainbow hues, produce a spectacular effect only comparable to the aurora borealis and is visible a hundred miles away.

Illuminating of the city hall with its tower and surmounting colossal statue of William Penn standing out in bright relief is on an elaborate scale, the founder of the city appearing as though surrounded by an aura of pink light.

Europe is represented by several buildings typical of the different countries. Spain's pavilion contains a valuable collection of art and historic treasures, including paintings, tapestries, and old armor. Sweden is represented by a permanent structure known as the John Morton Memorial building. It is erected in honor of the only Swedish signer of the Declaration of Independence. A central Hall of Fame will contain statues of noted Swedish men and women. Sixteen rooms, each named for a prominent person of Swedish extraction, will contain a variety of interesting exhibits, among which will be interesting examples of early Swedish inventions.

Exhibits from foreign lands will include those from Great Britain, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, France, Germany, Spain, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Yugo-Slavia, Rumania, Tunis, Liberia, China, Japan, India, Persia, Egypt, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Haiti, Panama and Nicaragua.

Wifey Will Probably Cook Hereafter

Here's a new recipe that the young housewife might add to her pet list. It may be called Castilian pudding. The discovery came about in the following manner:

A young man only a few months married is one of those males who cook. He was a great help to his mother, served in the mess department while in the army, and people said of him, "What a shame he didn't become a chef." With the background, the young man thought well of his culinary abilities.

One afternoon when he was home from work early and his wife was still playing bridge and drinking tea at a neighborhood party, he decided he would surprise her by concocting some of the fancy pudding he used to make—with sour milk. He had heard his wife say that morning there was sour milk in the refrigerator and going there, he thought he found it. There was a white curdled liquid in a milk bottle anyway and that is what he used for the pudding. Like a good cook should, he added a teaspoonful of soda, but, without waiting to see whether it fizzed or not, dumped the "sour milk" in with the rest of the pudding.

His wife finally returned home and dinner that night was a complete success until it came time for dessert. Both choked violently after the first spoonful and then wifey began to ask questions. It developed that the "sour milk" wasn't sour milk at all, but boiled castile soap, which wifey used for shampooing. The sour milk was in a pan on another shelf. Hubby should have known that, wifey said.—Philadelphia Record.

Hot Water Mines Sulphur

A vexing problem of getting sulphur up from far underground was solved on the gulf coast, when an ingenious mind hit upon the idea of first dissolving and then pumping it. At Freeport, Texas, 4,000,000 gallons of water are used daily in the process. Only a few years ago crude sulphur had to be brought in from Sicily, Japan and Spain. Now 500,000 pounds over that needed here is exported.

Do You Sometime WONDER?

Why one car will give good service for years while another of the same make will go in the scrap pile in a short time?

IT'S NO SECRET

THE oil which flows through the bearings of your car is intended to reduce friction and prolong the life of the car. This it will do if it is clean. But when loaded with suspended road dust, particles of carbon and bits of metal from the wearing parts, it acts as an abrasive and actually wears out the parts it should protect.

To get the best from your car, keep the oil clean by frequent changing. Cleaning and refilling your crank case is one many free services we render the public. We charge only for the oil used.. Other services which we are glad to render free are battery inspection and filling and free air service.
